Sharing Meadows Residents Learn How to Weave

Sharing Meadows is residential camp for other-baled adults located in LaPorte, IN. It was founded by a Catholic priest, Father Dennis Blaney some thirty years ago.

It is self-sustaining with the help of many volunteers. One of these volunteers is Margaret Jones. With the help of her family and others, she has taught some Villagers how to weave.

Some of their woven items have been sold by the Weavers Guild at the yearly style show and exhibit at the Chesterton Art Center. These photos were taken by Roz Potter, a weaver from the Guild, who was helping set up the looms so that weaving can continue under Margaret's supervision.

Margaret Jones teaches a member from Sharing Meadows how to weave. The items woven are later sold by the Weavers Guild.

Sharing Meadows residents proudly show off their finished products.
